Centre for the GeoHumanities

Newsletter No. 14 | Winter 2024

Centre for the GeoHumanities

Welcome to the fourteenth edition of the Centre for the GeoHumanities newsletter. Please get in touch at geohumanities@rhul.ac.uk if you have news you would like to share or would like your work featured.

Visiting Researchers (2024-25)

The Centre welcomes international and national visitors interested in our research and activities. Since 2022, we have hosted academic visitors from Queens University Ontario, Padua, Paris, Nuuksio, Cambridge, Oxford, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Bristol, Exeter, Kent and Brighton to welcome the Centre's Visiting Fellow, Jacob Bruyn, Switzerland and the UK with interests in plant humanities, cultural geography, food imaginaries, literature, architecture, the visual arts and museum design.

Dr Maren Zhang is Associate Professor in Modern Chinese Literature at the University of Nottingham, Shanghai, and author of a book on New Victorianism, empathy and reading Victorian literature in China, and articles on multiple modernities, cultural geography, and contemporary British literature.The Centre is delighted to welcome Dr Zhang visiting Fellowship at the Centre from August 2024, supported by the China Scholarship Council, Nottingham, and by England's New Towns Art Centre.

Camila Medina Novoa is a landscape architect trained in Chile, currently studying for a PhD at the Institute for Landscape & Architecture at ETH Zürich. She joined the research online at the Centre from August 2023 to January 2025, is the global coordinator of the Landscape Stewardship Network, and is a visiting researcher at Kew Gardens where she is a member of the Plant Humanities group.

Felipe Vilarim is a PhD student at the Universidade do Estado do Rio de Janeiro (UERJ), studying the history of cultural landscapes in Brazil. His research explores the intersections of urban and rural heritage and has interests in the role of film-making in landscape studies. He is visiting the Centre under the terms of a new Memorandum of Understanding between the Centre for the Humanities and the Duke University at Rio.

Dr Yitian Xu is Associate Professor in Art and Design, with a specialism in museum and exhibition design, at the Nanjing Institute of Technology. Her research interests include landscape, interior design and the global influence of Chinese culture. The focus of her visit to the Centre, supported by the CSC, has run from September 2024 to June this traditional art and design of Chinese flower arrangement.

Dr Ekaterina Ozolkova is Assistant Professor in Sociology at the University of Northumbria. Her research interests lie in the intersections between the environment, politics and humanitarianism that fashion entanglements in food production. She is visiting the Centre from January to December to lead imaginaries and is interested in the role of artistic practice in thinking about alternative futures for food production.

Research Highlights

Mapping the Journey of Life
A Leverhulme Major Research Fellowship

"Thames Life, The Voyage of the Lifeboat (1907), Tasmin Gibbins, © Mrs Tasmin Gibbins"

Veronica Della Dora is at work into a three-year Leverhulme Research Fellowship on the journey of life in art, ancient navigation given new resonance in the age of the Anthropocene. Since antiquity, human life has been imagined as a journey across land and sea, from birth to death. In the current crisis, the metaphor extended from individual spiritual trajectory to the collective destiny of humanity and the planet. Ancient navigation, for example, was a key component of the stormy ocean of the Anthropocene's late Quaternary Earth. Rooting in this universe, Mirror, Instantly, the metaphor has been resurrected at a new historical moment, when the fragility of life on Earth is at the forefront of our present concern, and forecast crisis is a dubious deep future. It is within this semi-continuum of human life in itself called into question. Why is the life journey imagined as a boat? How has this metaphor been adapted to representations changed over the centuries? And how do these ways of shifting perceptions of space and the environment, as well as of our relationship with the non-human? What can we learn from ancient and medieval navigation about how to approach the environment in the face of natural disasters or religious change? And what can they teach us about our relationships with the non-human world?

The Fellowship will result in a book which considers diverse representations of the journey of life in art, from ancient times to the present, from classical antiquity to the present, and from changing types of landscapes, modalities and scales associated with this metaphor reflect shifting perceptions of space, time and the environment, as well as of the human self, life and death.

Something in the Air
An AHRC Fellowship

"Sophie Hope and Nina Wakeford, 2024, Something in the Air, Performance (Part 1), The Things Room, North Block, Victoria and Albert Museum, London, UK. Photo: Courtesy of Something in the Air. Licensed under a CC BY-NC-ND 4.0 licence."

Sophie Hope and Nina Wakeford have been awarded a new AHRC Fellowship on 'Something in the Air: Performing Data, Sensing Environments, Activating Publics and Atmospheres'. The project fosters a community art sensing project in Argentina, and a newly articulate phase of the feminist satellite imaging project, Feminist Eye in the Sky, which was originally developed by Nina Wakeford, Deborah Lupton and Kate Orton-Johnson. Something in the Air will bring together artists, researchers and programmers to establish a model of art sensing in the underserved community of Villa Inflamable. Over the last year, open-sourced hardware's new, web-based sensor network Sapelli-Sensors Network has been developed by Sophie Hope and Nina Wakeford. Over the next months of the open-sourced network, Sapelli, will be developed to work with another sensor, from all over the world. For example, on 26th September 2024, Sophie Hope and Nina Wakeford ran a workshop at the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, with a group of artists, researchers and curators, to share images of Storm Boris (shown in the above image), and shared their reflections on vulnerable infrastructures, flooded landscapes and environmental activism. Sophie Hope's Something in the Air project is located in Wakeford's Feminist Eye in the Sky project. Over the next year, the open-weather archive will become a growing platform for sharing and collecting images of storms and environmental events. The new funding has begun this year and has 4 live provided resources for new collaborations, infrastructure and research that will continue to unfold over the coming years.

Local Theatres: Participation, Inclusion, Imagination
New AHRC Funded Research Project

Local Theatres is an exciting new two-year research project, funded by the AHRC, which examines the relationship between theatre and local communities, economies and cultures in the UK. It is led by Centre members Naomi Mcpherson and Tracy Gilchrist, from Royal Holloway's Drama and Theatre Department, and Professor Helen Nicholson from the University of Kent's Drama and Theatre Department.

The first strand of the project, Performing Localism, explores the work of national leaders in participatory theatres and also case-constellations and partnerships to create new work. The team is working closely with Paines Plough, Pentabus, Tiata Fahodzi and Fevered Sleep, as well as with local partners in Greenwich & Thamesmead, Hull, Kettering and Bexhill. David Gilbert's work on local archives. The project is also co-creating new work with Paines Plough, Pentabus, Tiata Fahodzi and Fevered Sleep. Lundon, The Canon, and The Stables, Hastings. Researching performing artists and communities participants will explore resources in their local archives and collections, and develop new performance work. Co-creating new work in partnership with these companies.

The second strand, Theatres and Local Cultures, will map the wider ecologies of local theatres in the case-study areas. Funded by Local Heritage Lottery Fund, Rachael Squire & Alasdair Pinkerton with Tom Fields & Eva Barlow-Lee Rose.

Weihua Wang, The grapevine of art and fate: a cultural geography of Tibetan Buddhist thangka painting, Royal Holloway, University of London, supervised by Isabel Augenstein & Pete Hobbs.

Emma Yandle, The geographical museum: making knowledge through objects, supervised by Jo Smith. Techne Collaborative Doctoral Partnership supervised by Felix Driver & David Gilbert with Sarah Evans, Catherine Souch & Katherine Parker at the RGS.

Award for PhD thesis on Pacific whaling

"Steam Port Journal of the Australian Navy Spring 1941 (Peter Duggan, 1939-45 War Collection)"

On 30 September 2024, the British Commission for Maritime History announced the winner of the annual Bassett & Brewer Prize for the best doctoral thesis in maritime history. The winner was Dr Peter Duggan, whose thesis was supervised by Felix Driver, Richard Squire & Alasdair Pinkerton with Tom Fields & Eva Barlow-Lee Rose. Dr Duggan's thesis, Whaling Stations and Global Imperialism, 1775-1965, examines the history of whaling stations in the Pacific Islands, Australia and New Zealand, and the role they played in global imperialism in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Dr Duggan is now a Visiting Fellow at the Centre for the GeoHumanities.

New Books

Evacuation: The Politics and Aesthetics of Movement in Emergency
By Pete Adey

This book's new book, Evacuation: The Politics and Aesthetics of Movement in Emergency, published by Duke University Press examines the politics and aesthetics of evacuation. Drawing on a range of attitudes from fears during emergencies. He argues that evacuation is a key way in which we understand and overcome social and political life, and reinforce social hierarchies. Drawing on a range of case studies, from the evacuation of cities of wounded soldiers from the battlefield during the First World War to the evacuation of cities during 9/11, human and animal evacuations in response to the Fukushima nuclear disaster and the 2011 Tohoku earthquake and tsunami, and the evacuation of cities during the Covid-19 pandemic, he obstruct credibility from the testimony of Black people; both enslaved and free, in colonial Grenada. The paper focussed on testimonies gathered by Macintosh in his role of Justice of the Peace for the parish of St Andrew's, in cases variously of theft and rebellion, and how the legal validity of those testimonies was established or rejected. In examining the case of the celebrated African autobiographical writer and anti-slavery campaigner Olaudah Equiano, who brought a complaint of theft by a white islander to Macintosh in 1771, Innes considered how Equiano's words were subject to 'testimonial injustice' by being made valueless through legal codes designed to protect and underwrite white hegemony. His paper concluded by exploring how the rebellious voices of enslaved Africans acquired credibility and political significance only when rendered through the testimony of white islanders, and how Macintosh's own credibility was later subject to doubt on the basis of suspicions as to his own racial identity. Innes' biography of Macintosh is under contract with McGill-Queen's University Press. To follow his continuing research, check out his blog: On the Archival Trail of William Macintosh.

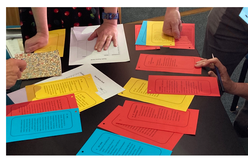
Voices for Change: Oral Histories of the Environmental Movement



Workshop participants at the 2024 Oral History Festival play the interviewee selection game designed by Barbara Brayshay and Jeremy Iles, members of the OHEM team

The Centre for GeoHumanities hosts a major AHRC-funded project on the Oral History of the Environmental Movement, or OHEM for short (see CGH Newsletter no. 10, 2022). In July 2024, project team members Barbara Brayshay and Jeremy Iles took part in the Oral History Festival at the British Library, organised by the Oral History Society in collaboration with National Life Stories (one of the partners on the OHEM project). The theme of their presentation was on 'the challenge of choosing which voices are heard', reflecting one of the core aims of the project to present a genuinely inclusive history of the environmental movement in terms of class, gender, ethnicity, (dis)ability, region and generation. In tune with the participatory ethos of the event, Barbara and Jeremy designed a game for the occasion ('the matrix game') in which a deck of cards with biographical details of anonymised activists were shared with participants who then had to face the challenge of designing and implementing an appropriate selection process resulting in an agreed list of interviewees which, reflected the diversity of the movement in all its forms. The exercise, which replicated in miniature a long and considered process which has involved extensive deliberation within and beyond the OHEM project team, generated much discussion. In fact it was so successful that the cards will be played again at future events!

Seventh Annual Cosgrove Lecture

May 2024

Judith Carney delivers the 7th Denis Cosgrove Lecture in the Lisa Sainsbury Lecture Theatre, Kew Gardens, 28 May 2024

Judith Carney's lecture, Planting Resistance: Botanical Legacies of the African Diaspora, was delivered to a packed audience at Kew Gardens on Tuesday 28th of May. Judith spent the afternoon before the lecture visiting the Kew collections and meeting with staff, including the Kew Director Richard Deverell and the Royal Holloway Vice-Chancellor, Professor Julie Sanders, also a member of the Centre for GeoHumanities. Afterwards Julie Sanders encapsulated the event in a vivid social media post: "A superb Denis Cosgrove memorial lecture this evening delivered with intellectual panache by Prof Judith Carney from UCLA, about food, autonomy & freedom, using a career-deep understanding of archival history & the concept of Bio-refugia to talk about participatory & just food futures. The best of UC Berkeley learned interdisciplinarity was being shared in a generous way that resonated so much with me and fellow audience members".

Judith Carney's lecture will soon be made available digitally by the British Academy – look out for the news from the GeoHumanities Forum and on the Centre website, where previous Cosgrove Lectures are also available in video and/or audio form.

Recent Events

Geographies of Law and Empire

Fortnightly from Tuesday 8th October 2024 | Institute of Historical Research in Senate House, London

Senate House, University of London, under construction, 1937

In conversation with a group of French historians, Michel Foucault once described his books as 'philosophical fragments made in historical construction sites'. If this metaphor has any lasting appeal amongst academics it is surely because today it is recognised that the work of building ideas is essentially a collective endeavour (even when its products are associated with individual authors). This is why the research seminar series remains one of our favourite building sites.

And so we welcome the latest seminar programme in the long-running series organised by the London Group of Historical Geographers, this one convened by Innes Keighren around the theme of law and empire. These seminars are free and open to all. To register to attend any of the seminars listed below, please visit this page on the website of the Institute of Historical Research. All seminars begin at 5:30pm and are available online; with the exception of the fourth (12 November), they can also be attended in person at the Institute of Historical Research in Senate House.

8 October 2024 Nathan Perl-Rosenthal (University of Southern California)
The art of prize: privateers' legal geographies in the long eighteenth century

22 October 2024 Lisa Ford (UNSW Sydney)
Inquiring into colonial law reform: views from the archives of the Commissions of Inquiry, 1819–1833

5 November 2024 Chloe Ireton (UCL)
Imagining liberty: legal geographies of enslaved and free Black people in in late sixteenth-century Sevilla

12 November 2024 Joel Wainwright (Ohio State University)
How does the law obtain its space? Justice and racial difference in colonial law: British Honduras (Belize), 1821, with Discussant: Filiberto Penados (Galen University)

3 December 2024 Mala Pal (Oxford Brookes University)
The law of infrastructure: jurisdictional accumulation and neo-imperialism at British and French undersea cable landing sites

Members of the Centre are also welcome to join the London Group of Historical Geographers' seminar mailing list to keep up-to-date with its activities or take a look at its archive of previous talks. The convenors of the Group are Felix Driver and Innes Keighren of the Royal Holloway Centre for GeoHumanities, Miles Ogborn (Queen Mary) and Margot Finn (UCL).

Eighth Cosgrove Lecture (2025)

The eighth in the Centre's series of Cosgrove Lectures will take place in 2025, provisionally on Thursday 15th May 2025 at Royal Holloway. Watch out for further details coming later in the year!

Previous newsletters back to 2016 are archived and available here.

view this email in your browser

Copyright © 2024 Royal Holloway Centre for the GeoHumanities, All rights reserved.

Want to change how you receive these emails?
You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list.

This email was sent to <<Email Address>>
why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences
Royal Holloway Centre for the GeoHumanities · Department of Geography, Queens Building · Royal Holloway, University of London, · Egham, Surrey TW20 0EX · United Kingdom